The rails and ties of the railroad were all twisted and wurped. The stench at Virginia Point was horrible.

There were 400 or 500 bodies scattered around in the wreckage on the beach for two miles, hanging on limbs of trees and in piles of drift wood. A stoop came over from Galveston, but wanted $5 each to carry us to the island, so the Gollaff brothers, an Italian and myself found an old scow up on the beach, Fischer conficentially and privately Piles, found an old scow up on the beach, Fischer conficentially and privately Piles, fraudrenged it into the water, manned it with new methods. dragged it into the water, manned it with new manned and landed on the west end of the baland. After landing we were separated that and I was lost; taking a large mill of some kind as a guide, I found my way juto the ciry. En route I found the bodies of men. women and children, horses, cows, mules and live stock all in norrible entanglements of shrubbery, trees and debris of every kind. I found as many as six human bodies in one pile.
